Finding the right job is very important, but not so easy for job seekers. If you can choose a suitable job for yourself, you are motivated to do that job and develop your career path. Below are some things for people to take into account when choosing the right job.

Working hours are considered among the most important factors when you choose a job. Many people prefer a nine-to-five job, so they can have a proper work-life balance. For example, working parents may expect to work from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. so that they can take their children to school in the morning or pick them up in the afternoon. Others may consider a job with flexible working hours, so they can do things they enjoy, like pursuing hobbies, educating themselves or spending more time with loved ones.

Another key factor you should consider is salary and other rewards. The salary is a huge part of the package employers offer, but it does not mean that you should always choose a job that pays well. Instead, you should opt for a job with a salary that can cover your cost of living and support you and your family comfortably. In addition to benefits such as health insurance and paid leave, you should also check if there are any perks on offer, for example, if working from home is allowed or if you get any employee discounts. Before making a final decision, you need to make sure that these benefits and perks are negotiated and included in the contract.

Finally, it is essential to consider the working environment and opportunities for professional development. If you have supportive managers and colleagues, you will be motivated to work harder and overcome any challenges. Opportunities for growth and promotion in a job should be considered carefully. As you develop your skills at work, it is important that your career path should fit into your dreams and long-term goals.

Lifelong learning is defined as the process of continuous learning to keep our knowledge and skills updated. The world we are living in is changing rapidly, so people are encouraged to learn new things their whole life. Older adults are expected to be lifelong learners so that they are not left behind in today's modern society. However, there are some obstacles to adult learning that can interrupt the process.

First, ageing is a natural process and will start in early adulthood and middle age. As a result, people will probably experience some of the effects of ageing such as worsening vision and hearing, and poor memory. When older adults decide to continue their education, they may find it difficult to keep up with younger learners in the same class. Ageing is believed to affect the capacity for participating in learning activities. Moreover, as it had been a long time since they had studied, older adults require more time to recall their existing knowledge and skills, and gain any new ones. They may find it difficult to overcome this challenge and to continue their studies.

The second challenge to lifelong learners, especially older adults, is that each of them as their own particular life situation including work or family responsibilities. Many people are in full-time employment and may be in charge of childcare, so they may find it hard to make time for classes or assignments. Those who live with extended family often take on more responsibilities and sometimes become overloaded. Some people may also face financial difficulties in their life, so earning a living must be their first priority. Although they may want to continue learning, they will be more concerned about how to make ends meet.

Finally, the decisive factor affecting people's lifelong learning is their motivation and purpose of learning. Older adults will be willing to continue their studies if they really need to update their knowledge and skills. Moreover, when they study with other people, they will feel like they belong to a community of learners sharing the same interests, and will have a strong motivation to learn. Motivation is also the key factor that helps people overcome their hardship and continue learning throughout their lives.
