WWF, in full World Wide Fund for Nature, is an international organization committed to the conservation of the environment. In North America, it is called the World Wildlife Fund.

In 1960, a group of British naturalists—most notably biologist Sir Julian Huxley, artist and conservationist Peter Scott, and ornithologists Guy Mountfort and Max Nicholson— led an effort to establish an organization that protected endangered species and their habitats. The following year the World Wildlife Fund was founded; the international name was subsequently changed to World Wide Fund for Nature in 1989, although in the United States and Canada it retained the founding name. The organization's distinctive panda logo was created by Scott. In the face of growing environmental threats over the ensuing years, the WWF's activities expanded in scope. Today its mission statement is threefold: to conserve the world's biological diversity, to ensure that the use of renewable natural resources is sustainable, and to promote the reduction of pollution and of wasteful consumption. The organization has long included both conservationists and business people with the intention of combining solid scientific data with well-managed action. It also seeks cooperation between non-governmental organizations, local governments, and local populations. The WWF works closely with the World Conservation Union and has formed partnerships with the United Nations, the World Bank, and the European Union.

The WWF provides money for conservation initiatives around the world. These include programs focused on individual species, forests, and freshwater, and marine issues as well as climate change and responsible international trade. The group has also been involved in efforts to provide a safe and sustainable habitat for the world's peoples, both urban and rural, including clean water, clean air, healthful food, and rewarding recreation areas. Among the WWF's notable achievements is its use of debt-for-nature swaps, in which an organization buys some of a country's foreign debt at a discount, converts the money to local currency, and then uses it to finance conservation efforts. The WWF's first successful debt-for-nature swap took place in 1987 in Ecuador.

At the beginning of the 21st century, the WWF was active in more than 100 countries and had more than five million supporters. The organization's international headquarters are in Gland, Switz., and it has more than 90 offices around the world.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

The Saola, a type of bovine that is native to the Truong Son mountain range in Vietnam's central region and is listed as endangered, has been unveiled as the official mascot for the upcoming SEA Games and ASEAN PARA Games 11. The Saola design, created by Hanoi artist Ngo Xuan Khoi, was declared winner in the mascot category. The work is an animated depiction of Saola, one of the rarest mammals on Earth found in the Truong Son Mountain Range in central Vietnam. Khoi said he chose the Saola because it is an endangered animal that was first discovered in Vietnam in 1992.

According to the event's organisers, the reason for choosing Saola as mascot is primarily to promote biodiversity throughout the country as it is a rare animal listed in the Vietnamese Red Book. Saola represents a friendly, flexible, and nimble character that serves to perfectly demonstrate the characteristics needed when engaging in sporting activities. Saolas are one of the rarest and most threatened mammals on the planet. Often called the Asian unicorn, little is known about the enigmatic Saola in the two decades since its discovery. None exist in captivity and this rarely-seen mammal is already critically endangered. Scientists have categorically documented Saola in the wild on only four occasions to date. Saolas are recognized by two parallel horns with sharp ends, which can reach 20 inches in length and are found on both males and females. Meaning "spindle horns" in Vietnamese, they are a cousin of cattle but resemble an antelope. Saola have striking white markings on the face and large maxillary glands on the muzzle, which could be used to mark territory or attract mates. They are found only in the Annamite Mountains of Vietnam and Laos.
