Bees play a crucial role in our ecosystem, contributing significantly to the pollination of many plants. They are responsible for pollinating a large portion of the crops we eat, including fruits, vegetables, and nuts. In fact, approximately one-third of the food produced globally relies on bee pollination. This essential process supports not only our food supply but also maintains biodiversity by enabling various plant species to thrive.

Unfortunately, bee populations are declining due to habitat loss, pesticide use, and climate change. Urbanization has also contributed to the loss of natural habitats, putting further pressure on these vital creatures. This decline poses a significant threat to food security and the environment, making it vital for us to take action. Many organizations and scientists are deeply concerned about this issue and are working tirelessly to find solutions that can help stabilize bee populations.

To combat this problem, numerous initiatives are being launched to promote bee-friendly practices. These include planting wildflowers, reducing chemical use, and creating urban green spaces that support bee habitats. Some cities have even established urban bee farms to enhance local populations, thereby raising community awareness about the importance of bees. Educational programs in schools also aim to foster an appreciation for the role bees play in our lives and ecosystems.

Educating the public about the vital role bees play is essential for conservation efforts. If we do not take action, the loss of bee populations could lead to dire consequences for both the environment and human health. Initiatives like community gardens and educational workshops are excellent examples of how local communities can contribute to bee conservation. Protecting bees is not just an environmental issue; it is crucial for ensuring a stable food supply for future generations.

Read the following passage about lifelong learning and mark the letter A,B,C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 31 to 40.

[I] In today's fast-paced world, ability to learn and adapt is becoming increasingly essential. [II] This is why lifelong learning skills are essential for students to develop. [III] These skills go beyond memorising facts and figures. [IV]

Two first important lifelong learning skills are the ability to summarise information and reflect on learning. These involve identifying the key points of a text or lecture and reducing them into a shorter form and then reflect on the past learning experiences and consider how new knowledge can be applied in the future. Learning from others and personalising learning are also vital skills. Students need to seek out mentors, peers and experts in their fields to learn from their experiences. At the same time, learning from others does not mean copying from them.

Students can tailor others' approach to learning to their own needs and preferences. For example, some peers learn best through visual aids, but you may prefer hands-on activities.

Reading extensively is a great way to learn about new ideas and perspectives. While reading a wide range of genres and topics, students cultivate their curiosity with the texts and identify connections between ideas. They can develop a deeper understanding of the materials. Familiarizing oneself with new technologies is also crucial for lifelong learning. With advances in technology, new learning tools are constantly being developed, and students need to be able to adapt to these changes in education. Online learning platforms, online courses, digital textbooks, and educational apps can provide students with new ways to learn.

In conclusion, the above-mentioned lifelong learning skills are indispensable for students to develop if they want to succeed in today's world. (Adapted from English Discovery - English 12)
