Ben moved from a busy city to a village six months ago. At first, he missed the shopping centres and his old friends. There were only a few small shops near his new home, and the bus to town came once an hour. He thought village life would be boring.

His opinion changed when he joined the local football team. The players welcomed him and invited him to practise twice a week. After practice, they often walked home together. Ben learnt about the village and made several close friends.

Now he enjoys the open spaces and the cleaner air. He sometimes helps his neighbour feed the goats at weekends. He still chats with his city friends online, but he does not spend as much time on his phone as before. Ben says the village is not perfect: travelling to town takes time. However, he feels that he belongs to the community and is happy with his new life.
