Time management is an important skill that helps people become more productive and less stressed. It means using your time wisely so that you can complete tasks efficiently and still have time for other activities.

Why is time management important? Imagine you have a big exam coming up. If you don't manage your time well, you might wait until the last minute to study.

This can make you feel stressed and unprepared. However, if you plan your study time in advance, you will feel more confident and do better on the exam.

Time management is also useful in daily life. At work, it helps employees meet deadlines and be more organized. In personal life, it allows people to balance their responsibilities with hobbies and relaxation. Good time management can improve overall well-being and reduce stress.

How can you improve your time management skills? Start by making a to-do list each day. Prioritize the most important tasks first and set deadlines for each one. Avoid distractions, such as social media, while working. Taking short breaks can also help you stay focused. With practice, you will become better at managing your time.

Question 26: What is the main idea of the passage?
