Every Wednesday, students at River School can join a lunch club. The club lasts thirty minutes and takes place in a quiet classroom. Students bring their lunch and leave their phones in a basket near the door. The aim is to help them talk face to face.

At the first meeting, the teacher gives each group a few question cards. The questions are about hobbies, favourite books and weekend activities. Nobody has to talk about private problems. Students take turns speaking, and the others listen without interrupting.

Lily joined because she wanted to make friends in her new class. At first, she spoke very little. After several meetings, she felt confident enough to bring a game for her group. Now she looks forward to Wednesdays. She says the club is a friendly place where everyone gets a chance to speak. The school plans to open another lunch club next term because more students want to join.
