The Birth of Seven Natural Wonders Seven Natural Wonders was created to celebrate and protect the original 7 Natural Wonders of the World. It's very important that these wonders are recognized because they are special, not because of money or business. A "Wonder" should be amazing on its own because of how different and important it is. The people who started Seven Natural Wonders knew that our world has many amazing places that could be called natural wonders. To recognize this, they started a project to find the top 7 natural wonders on each continent. These new wonders would be added to the original 7 Natural Wonders of the World. Their goal was to name the 7 Natural Wonders of Africa, Asia, Europe, North America, South America, and Oceania, which would add 49 new wonders to the list. They chose these places because they are very special and important. The group allowed the public to vote on the wonders, but each person could only vote one time. No one had to pay money or sponsor anything to vote. Experts from UNESCO and other groups, along with scientists and people who work in tourism, also helped to choose the wonders. They made sure to focus on how special each place was without any personal opinions. The public vote was important for two reasons. First, it was to see if people's choices were different from the experts' choices.
