Vy's school has a lunchtime music club. It is popular with students who want a short break from lessons. The club meets in an empty classroom twice a week. Students bring their lunch and listen to two or three songs.

Each meeting has a different leader. The leader chooses a type of music and explains why they like it. Last week, Duc brought folk songs that his grandmother enjoys. Several students heard them for the first time.

The club has a simple rule: everyone listens before sharing an opinion. Students do not have to like the same songs to enjoy the club. They ask questions and learn about one another's interests.

Vy likes pop music, but she now listens to other types, too. Next week, she is going to introduce a song from a cartoon. She has prepared a short note about it. Her friends are looking forward to hearing her choice.
