The environment is facing many serious problems, and one of them is deforestation. Trees are being cut down to make room for farming, urban development, and mining. This loss of forests has negative effects on our planet. Firstly, forests are the habitat of millions of animals and plants. When trees disappear, many species lose their homes and may become extinct. Secondly, trees play a vital role in absorbing carbon dioxide. Without them, the level of greenhouse gases increases, leading to global warming and climate change. To solve this problem, we need to protect existing forests and plant more trees. Governments should have strict laws against illegal logging. Individuals can also contribute by using less paper and supporting eco-friendly products. Saving the forests means saving our own future.
