E. READING

I. Head the passage and then answer the questions.

Teens often face health problems due to changes in their bodies and emotions during adolescence. Some common issues include being overweight, feeling stressed or sad, using drugs or alcohol, and having unhealthy habits. However, there are ways to help solve these problems and improve teen health.

One problem is being overweight. This can happen when teens don't exercise, eat unhealthy foods, or spend too much time on screens. To fix this, it's important to encourage exercise, healthy eating, and teach teens about good food. Schools and communities can also offer sports and healthy meals.

Another problem is feeling stressed or sad. Teens can feel pressure from friends, school, and their changing bodies. To help, we should talk more about mental health and make sure schools have counselors. It's important to create a safe and supportive environment and teach healthy ways to cope with stress.

Using drugs or alcohol is a serious problem among teens. Sometimes they try it because of friends or because they feel bad. To prevent this, we need to educate teens about the dangers, offer support programs, and involve parents. We should teach them how to handle problems without using drugs or alcohol.

Unhealthy habits like not eating well, not exercising, and not sleeping enough can harm teen health. We need to teach teens about the importance of being healthy and provide resources to help. Encouraging exercise, eating balanced meals, and getting enough sleep can make a big difference.

Questions:

1. What are some common health problems that teens face?

Some common health problems that teens face include being overweight, feeling stressed or sad, using drugs or alcohol, and having unhealthy habits.

2. What can contribute to teens becoming overweight?

Teens can become overweight when they don't exercise, eat unhealthy foods, or spend too much time on screens.

3. How can we help teens who feel stressed or sad?

We can help teens who feel stressed or sad by talking more about mental health, providing counselors in schools, creating a safe and supportive environment, and teaching healthy ways to manage stress.

4. How can we prevent teens from using drugs or alcohol?

To prevent teens from using drugs or alcohol, we need to educate them about the dangers, offer support programs, involve parents, and teach them healthy ways to handle problems.

5. What are some ways to improve unhealthy habits among teens?

We can improve unhealthy habits among teens by teaching them about the importance of being healthy, providing resources and support, encouraging exercise, promoting balanced meals, and emphasizing the need for enough sleep.
