Da Lat is a town located high in the mountains of Vietnam. Thanks to the temperate climate, this area is largely known for its plant cultivation and has been called the city of flowers. While it used to be a retreat for the wealthy who wish to escape the summer heat, nowadays it's popular with honeymooners and nature lovers. Being nature enthusiasts ourselves, we decided this sounded like a perfect place to celebrate our Christmas holiday. I'm happy to say the reports are not wrong! The town was exploding with color from all the flowers. Considering we were visiting in the winter, I can only imagine what this place is like in warmer months. During our visit, temperatures were mildly normal, interrupted by infrequent bursts of rain. This seemed perfect for a nature hike, and so after searching on the internet, we decided to head to Lang Biang mountain. According to Tripadvisor, there was a well-worn footpath up the mountain, great views of the surrounding valley, and no cover charge to hike. The only thing we had to do was getting ourselves there and back. As we expected, the radio tower is very touristy, with many paid photographers and some vendors selling refreshment. If you can get past that though, the views are amazing. We witnessed the sun breaking through the afternoon clouds, illuminating the rolling hills and river below us. Standing at the edge of a cliff, I couldn't help but be in awe at the beauty. If the town of Da Lat wasn't enough, this alone made it obvious why more people are visiting the region each year.
